CORNWALL – The release of the Cornwall Public Inquiry's final report will take place Tuesday at the Ramada Inn in Cornwall.

Inquiry Commissioner Normand Glaude is scheduled to deliver a statement at 11 a.m. in the Simon Fraser Ballroom.

Immediately following the statement, there will be a 30-minute media Q&A session with Commission lead counsel Peter Engelmann, Commission counsel Pierre Dumais, and Phase 2 director of policy Colleen Parrish.

Though limited in supply, copies of the report will be available to the public on-site and online at www.cornwallinquiry.ca

Copies of the report will be available from the Inquiry offices at 709 Cotton Mill St. until Dec. 18. Following that day, the reports will be available for purchase from Publications Ontario at www.serviceontario.ca/publications

The Cornwall Public Inquiry was established by the Government of Ontario on April 14, 2005, under the Public Inquiries Act.

The three-year, nearly $50-million inquiry heard testimony about allegations of historical sexual abuse and the possibility of a pedophile ring.

Glaude's report is expected, in part, to examine the institutional response to the allegations.

The report will also recommend services and programs that will encourage community healing and reconciliation in Cornwall.

Can't wait to see the report. Perhaps the Govt will finally appoint an Ombudsman to oversee the CAS at least

Don,t hold your breath if you expect this report to anymore than a sweep it under the carpet. This will most likely be a 50 million dollar pay out with little or know return. If he comes up with anything good I will really be amazed.

majekin if an ombudsman is appoint I hope they give him some power and a set of gonads to go with the job because he or she has a big job ahead of them these organizations have had no one to answer to for so long that they think they are untouchable.

Dodger I agree. The Govt has forgotten that families (all members) are what is important, not some agency out to give themselves a job. Things are in the works, will email you privately.
